"Thinking Tools"

Ethics

1. Teaching students to identify possible ethical aspects of the "Ethics" component of Depth and Complexity to explore with your students:

- Explore how Jack's mother treats him. E.g. name-calling (dolt, fool, idiot) and...
- Discuss how Jack takes advantage of sympathies for food, only to repay her (gold coins, goose, and harp) from her...
- Discuss the Giant's appetite for eating...
- The ending rewards Jack for being a very rich, and he married a great princess after. Is that an ethical and/or "fair"...

Multiple Perspectives

2. Explore the story from the point of view of story where he is the protagonist. One possible perspective is that of the poor Giant who, in his house, ate his food, stole his precious...

• Check your library for the book Trust Me: The Story of Jack and the Beanstalk as Told by Eric Mark Braun. This book provides an example of "Multiple Perspectives" in regards to this traditional story.

3. Readers can also have different perspectives of a character. Have students find contradictory details that relate to the same character. One example in this fairytale is how Jack is portrayed:

- Jack is dimwitted: No one will accept his work (according to his mother), the old man seems to think he is foolish when he sarcastically calls him "sharp as a needle", his mother calls him a dolt, etc.
- Jack is clever: He traded the cow for magic beans, he outsmarts the Giant.
